Dear Sir or Madam,

"Let's lem" – let's come up with something that could be the beginning of something greater – new, unique and groundbreaking in the history of human civilization.

In the Year of Stanisław Lem, announced officially by the Polish Parliament, we are pleased to announce "Let's lem" competition, for primary and secondary school students.

The newly created English idiom "Let's lem" is to encourage young people taking part in the competition to come up with fantastic, creative entries that may become a real object in the future.

The phrase itself has a chance to be remembered deeply as a synonym for creative thinking, without limits.

Stanisław Lem, writer, philosopher, visionary, predicted the future we live in. He created iconic inventions of modern times in literature a few decades earlier before the research and development works on them began. In the 1950s and 1960s in his books he invented everything that is now called: the Internet, audio-book, smartphone, drone or VR, among many others.

The most interesting results of the creative search of young people participating in the competition, i.e. a description of a creative idea, a product of the future, will be included in the e-book published under the title - "Let's lem". Competition entries can be sent in writing, graphically or as a recording.

Perhaps in a dozen or even several dozen years, the effects of "lemming" will be transformed into another Polish invention that will affect the fate of the world.
